“ Again, I just wish to offer my condolences. I just watched the service online. It was absolutely beautiful and such beautiful things were sad about Jane and from what I remember from when we were children and in high school, she never changed. I loved hearing about the memories. She shared about Andrew Jackson. She was right it was a tough school, but somehow we made it through the four years. It wasn't easy, but we were determined if she rest in peace, and may God bring you all peace.

Jane was one of the neatest people I think I have ever met in my life. She was fiercely loyal, incredibly smart, had a fantastically fabulous feisty side, and was just an overall joy to be around. There are some people in this world that you just know have an old soul, and she was one of them. Because of that, along with the other qualities I mentioned, I immediately liked her from the moment I met her, and knew I had met someone very special.

Here's a memory that will always mean a lot to me, and is one I will always cherish. When I was diagnosed with breast cancer a couple of years ago, she took the time to knit me the most beautiful shawl and hat I've ever seen, (the colors were of course pink and white, with pink being the color for breast cancer). She and Jack came down to our house to deliver it (we live a couple streets over from them), and I unfortunately wasn't available, (I think I was on the phone with a client or something like that, as I work from home). When my husband brought me what they had dropped off, I promptly burst into tears. I sat there and cried my eyes out for a solid 10 minutes. The fact that this dear woman, who was going through a battle of her own, took the time and effort to do something so kind, touched me deeply. Jane humbled me. I don't think I ever shared with her just how much it meant to me. Sure, I said thank you and let her know I appreciated it very much, but I never told her just how hard I cried and just how deeply (like, soul deep!!), her generosity touched me.

Hindsight is 20/20 of course, and if I could go back in time and truly express to her just how much it meant, and how much she meant, I would happily do so every moment of every day. To know Jane was simply to love her. It was impossible not to. I'm going to miss her very, very much.

To Jack, Melinda, & the rest of Jane's beautiful children, please know I am so, so sorry. If there's ever anything at all that I can do, no matter what time of day or night, I'm here.
