“ There are no words to express our sorrow and our sincere sympathy as to John's passing. He was the type of person who always put others ahead of himself. Always there to lend a hand to others. He was 'everyone's friend'. He was always the very first one out the door with his snowblower whenever there was a snowstorm, doing everyone's driveway. When his health started to decline, I did my best to try to repay this debt I owed him, but I was no match for his kindness and generosity. I have always felt guilty for leaving him to fend for himself during all those winters after we moved to Florida. I will always feel badly for that. John was a man who everyone liked and respected. There are very few men in this world who could ever even hope to measure up to the kind of person John was. I know this, as I have not met one yet, and most likely never will. Please accept our very deepest sympathy and condolences.
